Trust Company, Yale & Towne Manufacturing Company, United States Rubber Company, New Jersey Zinc Company, and many others whose libraries are not only the corner stones of their work and influence, but who perform a notable public service in offering to their employes the means to a useful, intelligent, and happy national life. Here "americanization" is not an empty abstraction.

To the accountant, who must of necessity be a close student of business life and tendencies, it is somewhat superfluous to point out the benefits of his library. For him it has always been indispensable. In these latter days, moreover, the need for intensive study as well as a broad knowledge was never so apparent. It is with profound sorrow that we announce the death in Buffalo on January 30, 1921, of Mr. H. S. Champlin, manager of the Buffalo Office. Mr. Champlin recently underwent an operation at the Homeopathic Hospital which he did not survive.

Mr. Champlin was a native of Buffalo, where his business interests were concentrated and where he enjoyed a wide acquaintance and the highest standing among business men. Prior to the consolidation of his practice with that of Haskins & Sells, on June 1, 1920, he had been engaged in professional accounting in Buffalo for twenty years.

His loss will be deeply felt not only by us, but by the community in whose life he had so honorable and distinguished a part.

The building occupied by our Saint Louis Office, hitherto known as the Third National Bank Building, has recently undergone a change of name, its new designation being the Liberty Central Trust Company Building.

Mr. R. J. Leo, of the San Francisco staff, has been appointed manager of the practice office recently opened in Portland, Oregon. Mr. Leo is a C. P. A. of Oregon and of California.

Our office at Paris has removed, under date of February 1, 1921, to new quarters at 2, Rue des Italiens.

Book Reviews

Hodge, A. C., and McKinsey, J. O. Principles of Accounting. (Chicago, The University of Chicago Press, 1920. 389 p.)

This familiar title serves to describe a typical text for first year students in a school of commerce of university grade where preparation for the accountancy profession is not the prevailing objective.

The authors recognize three classes of students, however, in planning the book. The first falls in the group which is primarily interested in the relation of government to business; the second, in preparing for public accounting; the third and largest, that group the members of which aim to become business executives or to devote their efforts to accounting of a non-professional nature.

While the book is of a high class, the exposition extremely clear, and the style good, it appears not to contain anything particularly new in content, arrangement, or method.

The first chapter is, from certain points of view, the best in the book since it presents an unusually good conception of accounting. It stresses accounting as an instrument of business control and shows
